According to Art. 67(3) EPC any contracting state which does not have as an official language the language of the proceedings, may prescribe that the provisional protection conferred by the publication of a European patent application, shall not be effective until a translation of the claims in the official language of the contracting state has been filed in the national patent office or communicated to the person using the invention in said state.

Austria makes use of this prerogative and requires that such translation in German to be filed. In the Ö. Patentblatt is this event advertised and recorded in INPADOC under this code.

From the date of publication by the Austrian Patent Office of the translated claims in German, the provisional protection according to Art. 67 (Publication of the patent application) takes effect.
